We read CEC's guidance for householders very carefully and began work believing it was provided for under permitted development rights. We ensured the dimensions of the proposed walls, driveway and shed were within the specified measurements and could find no reference to excavation thresholds in said guidance. We were also reassured by two very similar driveways built in the street within the past 4 years.

Two types of operation are proposed here to form the driveway: the excavation of the front garden and the construction of associated retaining walls. The proposed excavation works are an engineering operation which, because of the scale of the works relative to the size of the garden, could not be considered incidental to the formation of the driveway. The construction of the retaining walls is a building operation.
