If it is essentially replacing the existing electrical infrastructure with updated versions I doubt we would seek listed building consent for works of this nature. However, it may be important to note that we cannot provide formal verification of this via email. If you did require this level of verification, you could apply for an LBC which would most likely be returned as PNR (permission not required) and the fee returned.

The only information we have is from the letter from Scottish Power which I assume is common to all the stairs with old electrical supplies. Although the trunking and distribution boards will be modern they will be largely in the same locations as the existing installations and so we hope that there will be no need for detailed plans or elevations.
